Resource Guide

Responding to high risk vulnerable older people

SOUTHERN ADELAIDE REGION

A high risk vulnerable person refers to a person in urgent need of intervention or support to address or avoid a serious negative outcome, such as an acute health or mental health crisis, eviction or homelessness, abuse or criminal act or other serious harm to themselves or others. Risk is increased if the person has no effective and trusted advocate, if they do not have insight into their situation or if they are reluctant to accept assistance and do not understand the consequences of this decision.

A person at risk may be identified at many points in the community, by a member of the public or business, by a community organisation, service provider or the police. Recognised aged care or community service providers may be approached to make the first response to an older person in this kind of urgent situation or crisis.

Initial response aims

- Address the immediate safety of the older person and others
- Engage the older person in planning the next steps
- Undertake an initial risk screen (to understand the context and causes of the risks) in order to plan next steps and/or make referrals

Further aim

- Support the older person at risk to engage with relevant providers and services if needed i.e. health, mental health, homelessness, My Aged Care.

Key issues for engagement

- Recognise the person's priorities
- Establish a relationship of trust
- Maximise continuity and sustainability of supports
